* Data compiled from Doty's vita as presented to USF faculty in 2005. Research updates via Business Source Complete.

<sup>1</sup> Doty has often bragged that he earned $1,000 per day spent teaching in each executive education program at Syracuse. Based on information available at Syracuse.edu and cornell.edu, it is both possible and likely that Doty earned $10,000 per year teaching in executive programs.

<sup>2</sup> 2 of these 3 publications are ranked as A-Level publications using the current CoB Journal Classification System (ca. 1996). The remaining publication is “Other Scholarly Activity” according to the same system. All 3 were coauthored with his dissertation chair, Glick.
