Where is the help for [Akbar] Marvasti from his dear economist friends? Can he not find a job? Or is this simply the old story of rats turning on fellow rats when the heat is on them?

Dear USMNEWS:

Is Professor Kate Greene teaching this summer? Does that mean she had a psychological evaluation, or did the University drop that requirement? Do you know if that specific requirement has ever been attached to an administrator who has been in trouble?

Curious

Dear USM News:

Your recent editorial about Sami Dakhli is interesting. He was, and probably still is, one of the more arrogant individuals you could come across. Someone once told me that whenever they see those humorous television commercials about the Dos Equis beer man – the one who thinks he’s the most interesting man in the world – they think of Dakhli. Though that commercial is spoofy, that’s exactly how Dakhli sees himself – as the most interesting, appealing man in the world. Pathetic.

Dr. [Mark] Klinedinst does not appear on the fall schedule for economics courses; is he now finally gone for good like George Carter, Bill Gunther, and the rest of the malcontents?

Do you have any update on the fundraising efforts of Dean [Lance] Nail for the new business building? Everything seems very quiet about that. Did you see NC State received a $40M gift, Rollins College received a $12.5M gift, Montana State received a $3M gift, Illinois State received a $3M gift, and West Virginia's College of Business and Economics received a $3M gift; the money is out there, Dean Nail, keep looking!

Dear usmnews:

I read recently about Brett Favre's 7-on-7 football camp that is being hosted at USM. Your readers should get on the internet and read up on all of the 7-on-7 football camp controversies that are brewing up these days. They are related to the controversial "street agents" issue. It's funny that USM gets on board the 7-on-7 wave on the downside. Also, Van Arnold's USM press release mentions, and quotes, a high school prospect by name. I believe that, since Arnold is a USM rep, an NCAA violation was committed by the press release.
