Dear usmnews.net,

A recent editorial pointed out that when he first arrived, you “advised [Director of the School of Accountancy] Hughes that he would have to change faculty who for decades published only in low quality journals.” Well, it appears he may be doing just that. Three are gone, now. Charles Jordan, the king of low level publications; Rod Posey of the elusive more than a 100 publications; and Patty Munn, gossipier extraordinaire. Now, what’s left of the bunch he needed to change? Mary Anderson, who has published one low level publication since 2008? Steve Jackson, an apparently permanent, untenured associate professor? Given Anderson’s research for the past five years, Hughes may be able to ease her out. As for Jackson, he appears to be falling into the Jordan pattern of pushing out low level publications, but fewer of them.
