Dear usmnews.net,

I have a question. Whenever I go to Chicago, I drop by the University of Chicago and take a book from the shelf. Sometimes I even read a few pages. Harvard's libraries are really cool. They make a great place to read The Wall Street Journal. Does this make me an academic scholar at Chicago and Harvard? Like you, I checked the London School of Economics and could not find a single reference to Ed Nissan, let alone where he was identified as an academic scholar. What was Ed up to in making this claim?
