

GH Chatter

Discussions continue about dean Lance Nail's plan to develop standards for differential teaching loads. Just hearing that such a plan is in the works is enough to scare some of the CoB's old-timers, who feel entitled to their cushy teaching loads despite having written off research. The development of a sincere differential teaching load policy would be a major step in the right direction for USM's business school. Because that is so, some are saying don't count on it happening any time soon.

How do all of the CoB's (permanent) deans compare against one-another? A recent chatter held the following ranking: (1) Ty Black, (2) Lance Nail, (3) Bill Gunther, (4) Joe Greene, and (5) Harold Doty. It's interesting that Nail would already rank second to some. It's no surprise, however, that Harold Doty brings up the rear.

GH Chatter is a series at USMNEWS that provides a glimpse at what CoB students, and sometimes CoB faculty, are discussing throughout the corridors of Joseph Greene Hall and beyond.
