

Surprised by New Book, New Allegations?

Take a look at a report from Inside Higher Education titled New Book, New Allegations by Colleen Flaherty

You shouldn't be surprised. When an accrediting organization defends, condones, and supports plagiarism, i.e., copying "without proper citation,"—the language of defense of plagiarism in the reports cited below—you get the idea that plagiarism has gone mainstream. Are Harold Doty and Charles Jordan at the forefront of academic progress with their justification of plagiarism by labeling it as copying "without proper citation"? If you don't, the AACSB (Association to Advance Collegiate Schools of Business) did, and still does.

If you're new to corruption in academe—including plagiarism, you have some catching up to do. And if you are interested in fully documented sources with regard to corruption and dishonesty including open records information, depositions, court hearings, etc., see the following reports as part of your review.

Ethics, Power, and Academic Corruption. Testing Social Reality. Parts 1 and 2. Available at Amazon.

And

University and AACSB Diversity, is free.

Chauncey M. DePree, Jr., DBA, Professor (recently retired after 30+ years at universities), University of Southern Mississippi.