University of Northern Iowa	$171,609
Coastal Carolina University	$150,000

The table above says a lot. While Part 1 of this series showed that the salaries of the CoB's finance faculty were struggling to keep pace with those at Coastal Carolina University, the College of Charleston, and Francis Marion University, and while Part 4 of this series indicated that the salaries of the CoB's management faculty were not keeping pace with those at the University of Northern Iowa, it seems that Alvin Williams' current salary of $175,000 is doing just fine against the top administration salaries in the b-schools at three of these four institutions. And by the time a new Dean is named, the CoB's Dean salary pool could exceed that of the College of Charleston, a move that would put the CoB in the center of the table above, below only major institutions such as the University of South Carolina, Iowa State University, etc.

Once again, the "one eye toward myself" mentality of the CoB's administration seems to be paying dividends. Maybe one day the other eye will not favor sycophants, but the average CoB faculty instead.
