

Texas Visits usmnews.net Often: Harold Doty Is Still The Most Popular

Over the years, usmnews.net has monitored whence its readers originate. Not too surprisingly, many of the queries involve former USM College of Business administrators. In fact, two former deans and a former associate dean now live and work in Texas.

usmnews.net is keenly aware of the interest in the history of administrators' behavior. Before a university or a faculty hires someone else's problem, they want to know what the administrator was like at his last job. They are well aware of the dubious platitudes and glib phrases many bad administrators hide behind. usmnews.net believes as a matter of editorial policy that their history be available to those who are or may become subject to their decisions, especially when those decisions were intended to devastate careers of non-compliant faculty.

Harold Doty was widely viewed as one of the single most toxic deans ever to serve at USM's College of Business Administration, and remains a very popular subject of inquiry.

Folks are also inquisitive about the past USM Business College Dean Lance A. Nail. Nail was generally viewed as taking the first Dean's job he could find, keeping his head down, getting through accreditation, so he could graduate to the deanship of a better school.
