

The Last Nail: John Clark

If Dean Lance Nail is looking to further sabotage his efforts at making the College of Business better, then his opportunity awaits him like a lethal injection of poison. That dose of poison is named John Clark and he would end any chance Dr. Nail has at success if he were to foolishly name Clark interim chair of FINRELS. Clark fits the mold being made for recent administrator hires: little research productivity, mediocre classroom performance, and some nominal service. Clark would probably be the worst hire of all, and certainly would be another nail in the coffin of Lance's deanship.