

Tim Hudson Tip Toes into ASU Chancellorship

FORMER USM PROVOST ON THE MOVE ONCE AGAIN

Texas Tech University vice chancellor Tim Hudson, the former provost and long-time professor at USM, was barely in that post for six months when, on 2-Mar-2012, he was named as the new chancellor of Arkansas State University. According to the ASU System press release, Hudson is thrilled to be taking over the top spot on the Jonesboro campus – “It is both humbling and thrilling to be named the next chancellor of Arkansas State University -- humbling because I know the committee and the entire ASU family was engaged in this process and thrilling because I feel like I have been given the opportunity of a lifetime to work at the very sort of institution I love, in such an attractive community. I look forward to being part of a dynamic leadership team that will move ASU to the next level, one characterized by innovative research conducted by a world class faculty that finds its way into the canons of global knowledge, into the classroom, and into real-world solutions.”

ASU System president Charles Welch introduces Hudson to the ASU family.

Hudson is set to begin this next phase in his academic career on 1-May-2012. On that date, Hudson’s three-year contract with ASU will commence, and he will begin earning $275,000 per year. Hudson’s selection by ASU System president Charles Welch also validates the 28-Feb-2012 prediction made by Roy Ockert, the editor emeritus of The Jonesboro Sun who wrote that Hudson would get the nod. As Ockert stated, certain advantages, one of which relates to the issue of fairness, gave Hudson the advantage over two other finalists. Other issues of impropriety were raised by an anonymous visitor – “Curious in Arkansas” – to the message board administered by the USM chapter of the AAUP. This poster indicated that Welch added Hudson’s name to the short list of finalists “at the last minute,” raising questions of cronyism. Finally, and as expected, news of Hudson's appointment reached media in Lubbock, TX, only minutes after the announcement was made in Arkansas. Only time will tell how Hudson’s brief stint at TTU will play with the Lubbock community.
